As old as the hills. -The conflict between the Palestinas & Israelites

Many Jews were persecuted all over Europe and no one wanted to help them, and they took refuge in Palestine and created shelters and houses. The Jews were acquiring the land from the Palestinians and created a community called Israelis, and the Israelis began to destroy the houses of the Palestinians, leaving them with less and less land, and the Israelis ended up having 78 percent of the Palestinian lands.

The Palestinians did a good deed in letting the Israelis take refuge in their country, as no one wanted to help them. I think that if they had controlled the situation a little more, nothing bad would have happened, they should have shown that this was their country and that the Israelites were there only because they had nowhere to go. They should have limited the construction of houses and shelters and I think they could have had a little more guarded so that nothing bad happened.

And on the part of the Israelites, I think they should have been more grateful since it was in the only place where they could take refuge, if they needed more land to build shelters, they could have asked permission or help from the Palestinians and if they did not provide them that help should have adapted to what they already had.

All in all, I think that if they had spoken and they had organized well, everything that happened so far could have been avoided and they could all live together in the same place.
